Odyssey into the Human Genome

David Haussler

David Haussler's research lies at the interface of mathematics, computer science, and molecular biology. He develops new statistical and algorithmic methods to explore the molecular function and evolution of the human genome, integrating cross-species comparative and high-throughput genomics data to study gene structure, function, and regulation.

As a collaborator on the international Human Genome Project, his team posted the first publicly available computational assembly of the human genome sequence on the Internet on July 7, 2000.

Last Week's Highlights

Invocation: Tana Widdows reminded us to be the reason that people feel welcome, not the reason they feel insecure.

Raffle Winner: Steve Karon was a winner of some fine goods by way of Wally Walker. Thanks Jeanette!

Detective: Blaine Brokaw reminded millennials how entitled they are by entitling them to fine some of the other club members. 100% of the entitled millennials in attendance that day were Certified Public Accountants, and 2/3 of all Certified Public Accountants in attendance were millennials. If Frank Minuti was the only Certified Public Accountant who was not a millennial, how many millennials were fined? The answer is zero.

Last Week's Program – Red Badge: Tana Widdows & Rick Melrose

Tana kicked off her Red Badge Speech by sharing with us her love of knitting and sense of fashion. Tana knit many wonderful pieces over and passed them around - it was show-and-tell... Rotary style!

Tana made her way to Santa Cruz after meeting her boyfriend, James, on Tinder. They both “swiped right” and have been living happily ever since.

After a successful stint working sales at British Petroleum (BP), Tana was feeling unfulfilled and wanted to make the jump into real estate. Tana has enjoyed tremendous success in the local market...

Rick took us back in time to when he was just a young boy with a twin brother living on the West Side of Santa Cruz.

Rick has many Rotary connections including a grandfather that was once President of our club. He worked with Maurice Carrillo at a stationary store before the Loma Prieta earthquake.

Rick and his wife Wendy (Gutberlet) Melrose have one son, Peter. They currently own and operate Bunny's downtown, but they plan to close the store soon. Wendy has a passion for floristry, particularly with regard to special events. Their business, Luna Floral, does many weddings and events at high-end venues around the central coast.
